Kind Curiosity

Kids (and adults!) who are blind learn about the world in some pretty cool ways. They might:

- Read using Braille, which is the alphabet system of raised dots they feel with their fingers.
- Use a white cane to help them safely move around.
- Listen carefully to sounds to understand what is happening around them.
- Use technology that talks out loud, like screen readers on phones or computers.

MEET A friend

Christan

I have known Christan since she was a little girl. She loves puffy stickers, music, dancing, getting her nails painted, and chatting with friends. Do you like any of these things too? Christan is just like a lot of other girls — but Christan is blind.

Being blind means a person's eyes don't work the way most people's do. Some people who are blind can see light or shadows, and some don't see anything at all.

Being blind doesn't change who someone is. Kids who are blind can learn, play, laugh, make friends, love Jesus, and enjoy sports, music, and adventures — they just do some things in different ways.
